ARTICLE BY RICHARD RHODES KH6IO

YOUR LIFE STORY ON AMATEUR REPEATERS:

(SHORTENED VERSION)

I have spent a major portion of my adult life as a U.S. Treasury Agent, a CIA agent a writer, lecturer to citizen groups and Police groups on the subject of Security.

While you may not share my total outlook, some of my observations should cause you to stop and think about what you say on the ham repeaters.

Because repeater activity is usually confined to talking to the same friends - to point that we recognize each other by voices - we tend to forget how many eavesdroppers there are. With all the scanners portable radios that tune the VHF bands, ham rigs sold at flea markets, etc., there is a vast audience out there for your casual remarks. Complete with the fact that you are listed in the call book, and local ham club list, and you are inviting problems if you talk indiscriminately.

I made profiles of people and families I heard on the repeaters, and phone patches. I learned names, address, phone numbers of husbands, wives, employers, their home address, names and ages of school age children, schools they attend. Also divulged were long list of personal possessions, their vacation plans (with dates and places), the nights they would be out to dinner or a show and even when they would return home. Some folks told who was left at home (elderly parent, child, babysitter, and where they left the spare key to the house.

Also heard were discussions of medication used, kinds of booze they drank, general status of their marriages, etc., IS ANY OF THIS THE BUSINESS OF A STRANGER ? Would you go on local AM radio station and talk about these personal matters? Its a little wonder you hear some people remark "Well I don't talk much on the repeater I listen a lot. I should think so. It's incredible what you hear.

The concept of security is harder to sell than a 75 meter rhombic to a aeronautical mobile operator.

Think before you key the mike button, someone out there just may be waiting for you to supply the last piece of the puzzle. (ARNS Bulletin)
